

MACLEAN'S

Made by Ardnamurchan Distillery

Scotland's Greenest Distillery

Blended and brought to life by team Ardnamurchan, endorsed and approved by our Chief Nose. Maclean's Nose is a nod to our rugged Western peninsula home, and a homage to the long mentorship we have received from Mr Charles MacLean. The bottle labels have been designed in partnership with Scottish artist Reuben Sian de Gourlay. They are made from Crush Barley, a sustainable paper, and include QR codes that share information about the whisky and its make-up. The Ardnamurchan Distillery opened in July 2014 and is situated half way along the peninsula in the small village of Glenbeg. The distillery was built to meet the challenges of a sustainable future using exclusively renewable local energy sources. Whisky is a 'natural' product and the distillery has ensured that this is reflected in the way they operate. Uniquely in the whisky industry, all the power and heat requirements for the Ardnamurchan Distillery come from local renewables – the river that provides the distillery's cooling water has a hydro-electricity generator and the biomass boiler is fueled by woodchip from local forestry – the overall footprint of the distillery is a light one. In addition, the by-products of the whisky-making process are recycled on the peninsula – the still energy-rich draff (what's left in the mash tun) is combined with the pot ale to produce animal feed for use on the peninsula. Don't miss out on the opportunity to experience the unparalleled quality and taste of Maclean's Nose Whisky. Order your bottle today and elevate your whisky drinking experience to new heights. Cheers to good times and great whisky with Maclean's Nose!
